THE PROBLEM

Modern job searching is broken — here's why.

Millions of qualified candidates are filtered out before a human ever reads their CV. Here are the six root causes.

ATS Filters Kill Good Candidates Up to 75% of CVs are rejected by Applicant Tracking Systems before a recruiter ever reads them — even when candidates are highly qualified. The system is designed to filter, not to find the best person.	Job Searching Takes 100+ Hours The average job seeker spends over 100 hours on a single search: writing cover letters, tailoring CVs, and filling out repetitive application forms across dozens of portals.
Keyword Matching Is a Science Every job description hides specific keywords that ATS systems scan for. Without knowing exactly which words to use, even perfect candidates get filtered out automatically before any human sees their profile.	Response Rates Are at an All-Time Low Average application response rates have fallen below 5%. Most candidates never hear back — not because they're unqualified, but because their CV wasn't optimised for that specific role and ATS.
Personalisation Doesn't Scale Writing a tailored CV and cover letter for each role takes 45–90 minutes. Applying to 50 jobs? That's a full working week — just on paperwork — before a single interview is booked.	Candidates Don't Know What's Wrong Most job seekers don't know why they're not getting callbacks. Without data, scoring, and feedback loops, they keep repeating the same ineffective approach with no improvement over time.
